

The ABAS Law Foundation congratulates the 2024 Scholarship Recipients

Tiffany Charvet earned a B.A. in International Relations and Government with honors from Claremont McKenna College, complemented by a Legal Studies sequence. She is currently pursuing a Juris Doctor degree at UC Davis School of Law. At just 16, she co-founded Share and Care Foundation Corp., a nonprofit dedicated to providing essential resources to marginalized communities, with inclusivity at its core. During her college years, Tiffany championed the Bluebook Public Access Initiative and co-led the inclusive pronoun initiative during her externship with Chief Justice González at the Washington Supreme Court. In law school, she founded iConnect to support immigrants and second-generation immigrant law students and serves on RROC's voting board, which funds events hosted by historically underrepresented campus groups like the Asian Pacific Islander Law Student Association (APALSA) and the Filipino Law Student Association (FLSA). After graduation, Tiffany aspires to clerk for a judge while actively engaging in judicial outreach programs to contribute to her community.

Angela L. Valenzuela is a rising 4L at Lincoln Law School of Sacramento and full time law clerk at Hiroshima Daggett in Rancho Cordova, CA. She and a small group of students reinstated Lincoln's chapter of the Asian Pacific American Law Student Association in hopes of creating a community to support Asian American/Pacific Islander law students on campus. Angela has participated in many local events, and is a member of various organizations, namely the Asian/Pacific Bar Association of Sacramento, the Sacramento Filipino American Lawyers Association, Women Lawyers of Sacramento, and the Sacramento County Bar Association. In 2023, she was awarded "Best Brief" in Moot Court. This summer, Angela will be an extern under Presiding Justice Laurie Earl at the Third District Court of Appeals.

Jenny Feng is a 1L at UC Davis School of Law. During her undergrad, she volunteered at an after-school program in Oakland Chinatown, and worked on voter registration campaigns in Orange County in partnership with AAPI nonprofits. Prior to law school, she was an AmeriCorps Coach for a year, and was a community organizer advocating for BIPOC youth in her hometown. At King Hall, she is on the leadership boards of UC Davis APALSA and First Generation Advocates. After law school, she hopes to become a civil litigator, and use her skills to provide legal aid and help with impact litigation.

Sinporion Phuong is a second-year law student at King Hall, UC Davis School of Law. There, he is a civil procedure tutor for first-years, a senior article editor for law review, and the banquet chair for APALSA, and he competed in several negotiations and moot court competitions. He has also previously interned at the California Supreme Court, Sacramento Public Defender's Office, and ACLU NorCal, and he will be joining the Public Defender Service at the District of Columbia Special Litigation Division in the Summer of 2024 and his law school's Civil Rights Clinic in the Spring of 2024. These experiences fuel his passion for ensuring that all individuals have proper representation regardless of their financial status or identity, and he hopes to have a career working towards direct criminal representation or towards impact criminal justice litigation.

Roxanne Galdos is a rising 2L at McGeorge School of Law. Prior to starting law school she gained experience in family law and immigration law. Roxanne was selected to participate in the 2024 SCBA Diversity Fellowship program this summer and will be working with Cook Brown LLP. In the upcoming academic year Roxanne will serve as the Community Outreach Chair for the Womxn of Color Collective (WOCC) where she hopes to bring community leaders to McGeorge that exemplify the intersectionality that women of color bring to the legal field.

During her time at King Hall, Courtney S. Patton served as the Diversity, Equity & Inclusion Editor for the UC Davis Law Review, External Competition Chair of the Moot Court Honors Board, External Communications Chair of the Filipinx Law Student Association, and Co-Chair of the Parent Legal Society. She was also a certified legal student for the UC Davis Civil Rights Clinic, an Academic Success Program Skills Tutor for first-year law students, and a research assistant for Professor Aaron Tang. She also competed twice for the Moot Court Honors board at the ABA National Appellate Advocacy Competition. After taking the California Bar, Courtney will work for Ogletree Deakins in employment litigation in their Sacramento office.
